

Jason Carroll Holloway

Writer and researcher at the intersection of acoustic science, medieval scholarship, and human consciousness.

ONE LINE

Jason Carroll Holloway is a Kansas City writer and researcher and the founder of Seventh City Press, author of the Masters X Trilogy.

SHORT — ~50 WORDS

Jason Carroll Holloway is a writer and researcher based in Kansas City and the founder of Seventh City Press. His work explores the intersection of acoustic science, medieval scholarship, and human consciousness. He is the author of the Masters X Trilogy — The Inheritance of Frequency, The Grimoire, and The Kingdom.

STANDARD — ~100 WORDS

Jason Carroll Holloway is a writer and researcher based in Kansas City and the founder of Seventh City Press. His work explores the intersection of acoustic science, medieval scholarship, and human consciousness — a set of preoccupations that runs through the Masters X Trilogy, his three-volume work of literary conspiracy fiction. He holds an M.A. in English Literature from Mercy University in Dobbs Ferry, New York, along with degrees and certificates in psychology, sociology, creative writing, and data analytics. Alongside the novels he maintains the Analysis Chamber, an open research archive that publishes the same acoustic measurements his characters run in the books. He lives and writes in Kansas City.

EXTENDED — ~180 WORDS

Jason Carroll Holloway is a writer and researcher based in Kansas City and the founder of Seventh City Press, the independent imprint behind his Masters X Trilogy. His work refuses the usual border between imaginative and intellectual writing: novels built on real archaeoacoustics research, medieval manuscript scholarship, and the documented subterranean geography of his own city.

The trilogy — The Inheritance of Frequency, The Grimoire, and The Kingdom — braids the undeciphered Voynich Manuscript, the medieval Ars Notoria, and a recurring 111.2 Hz frequency into a conspiracy that begins beneath Kansas City and reaches a crypt sealed under Prague since 1267. Much of the science underpinning the fiction is published openly through the Analysis Chamber, a research archive on his website.

Holloway holds an M.A. in English Literature from Mercy University in Dobbs Ferry, New York, along with degrees and certificates in psychology, sociology, creative writing, and data analytics. He has also written scholarly criticism, including a monograph on the novelist John Hawkes. He lives and writes in Kansas City.

BOILERPLATE — SEVENTH CITY PRESS

Seventh City Press is an independent literary imprint founded by Jason Carroll Holloway to publish work that refuses the division between imaginative and intellectual work — novels that think, and criticism that speaks. The name comes from the seven cities of the Aldric tradition in the Masters X Trilogy.